Not illustrated. 1905 Excerpt: . . . depth, indicating the channel lines, and the sub-aqueous contours, correspond to contour curves on ordinary topographic maps, and are drawn in a similar manner. In the case of sub-aqueous contours it is customary to indicate different depths by characteristic lines, a special form of line being used to designate each depth shown. The forms commonly used in drawing lines of equal depth are as follows: For the shallowest contour: . . . --For the contour next in depth: . . . . For the contour next in depth: . . . . . and so on for successive contours. In addition to such details as have been described, the direction of the current is shown by an arrow and the directions of true and magnetic north are shown by suitable symbols. In many cases it is considered advisable to show the positions of survey stations and sounding ranges on a hydrographic chart. This practice, however, is not common, especially in cases of charts intended for navigation purposes alone. Hydrographic Chart of River. In Figure 55 is given a hydrographic chart of part of a navigable river, showing the various details that have been described, including sounding ranges, depths and limits of channel. The lines of survey are drawn in light, full lines, the ranges are shown by broken lines; the angle stations are numbered consecutively down stream, and the ranges are designated by letters of the alphabet, as shown. Depths of soundings are expressed in feet...
